BREAK THE CYCLE OF CRIMINAL BEHAVIOR

Learn how to understand, prevent and anticipate criminal behavior with a Master of Science in Criminology degree from Regis University—one of only seven schools in the country to offer this master's level program both in class and online. Choose a specialized focus in leadership, human behavior or cybercrime/terrorism from a customizable curriculum that allows you to tailor course work to your interests and career goals.

Earn your masters on campus, online or a combination of both with a program that opens up more exciting career opportunities than what a criminal justice degree provides.

CRIMINOLOGY VS. CRIMINAL JUSTICE

Criminology and criminal justice are viewed as “cause and effect”. While both support society’s laws, there are major differences in the academic approaches they employ in the study of criminal behavior.

› CAUSE: CRIMINOLOGY
   A master’s degree in criminology focuses on the psychology of crime and the causes that relate to and lead to criminal behavior with the goal of preventing them. This degree offers a broad range of career opportunities that include leadership within law enforcement and the criminal justice system, as well as, roles in social services, public policy, the military, the security field and more.

› EFFECT: CRIMINAL JUSTICE
   A master’s degree in criminal justice focuses on the effects of crime, related to the apprehension, prosecution, incarceration and treatment of criminals. The most popular careers in criminal justice are typically associated with law enforcement, corrections and the criminal justice system.
